

This spirit and the feeling the work imparts to the viewer is the hallmark of an Ostermiller sculpture.

About the Artist:

A native of Cheyenne, Wyoming Dan Ostermiller has been based in Loveland, Colorado for over forty years and was given his first solo exhibition in 1980. He has been a primary driver of Loveland's active sculpture scene, where over 200 sculptors reside, and over 300 other artisans are employed. Generous by nature, committed to fostering other artists and the sculpture field as a whole, Ostermiller is a member of the Society of Animal Artists and Allied Artists of America. He is a fellow and served as First Vice-President of the National Sculpture Society. His award-winning works have been honored with many solo exhibitions around the U.S. and beyond and are held within the permanent collections of major museums.

Our “Gardens Gone Wild” exhibit is here! Nearly 20 bronze pieces by Dan Ostermiller will be on exhibit on our grounds and throughout the Grand Conservatory Building through August.

Cheyenne native, Dan Ostermiller, has been based in Loveland, Colorado for over forty years. His award-winning works have been honored with many solo exhibitions around the U.S. and beyond and are held within the permanent collections of major museums.

The pieces of “Gardens Gone Wild” represent a full spectrum of wildlife and familiar barnyard animals and have been exhibited at botanic gardens all over the nation. Most recently, they were on display in New Mexico at the Santa Fe Botanical Garden.

Most of the pieces are for sale, and smaller pieces are available for purchase from the Tilted Tulip gift shop at the Cheyenne Botanic Gardens.
